

CURRICULUM MAP

Intent:

The aim of religion, philosophy and ethics as a subject is to provide a rich and varied curriculum that enables pupils to effectively engage and communicate with the world around them. Religious literacy involves a critical analysis of what people believe and how this relates to religious practices and philosophical and ethical questions.

With a large number of feeder schools and pupils from a wide variety of faith backgrounds, the curriculum has been developed to take account of a diversity of prior knowledge and experience in this subject. RPE is a multidisciplinary subject by nature. Pupils also need to understand that religious communities are internally diverse and the curriculum hopes to reflect national, international and local concerns relating to religion, philosophy and ethics.

Students studying religion, philosophy and ethics will become critical thinkers capable of contributing to social and work situations later in life with empathy and understanding of a range of issues, beliefs and cultures.
